

I strongly recommend this well-researched and written volume. It fills a major gap in the history of Newfoundland's marine resource industries, their enterprise development around whale resources, and their trans-Atlantic connections with Europe, especially during the 19th and 20th centuries. It has value for audiences in multiple disciplines, and will be particularly useful for students of whaling history and economic geography, Newfoundland's coastal economic development, marine renewable resources and their management, and related issues of coastal societal development.
