GEORGE WING

From Seven Poems on a Theme to Laura

You whisper to water, thoroughly embraced.
When you separate, it clutches at your shoulders, collapses at your feet, battered. Rivulets remind your flank and back. I watch them slipping off your skin’s indifference to their drying.

HAROLD F. MOSHER, JR.