*efore the Roman came to Rye or out to Severn strode,
The rolling English drunkard made the rolling English road ;
And though the road is straighter now it's clearly to be seen
That English roads are Burmah roads, from Poole to Palmers Green.
Our motors murmur Burmah fuel – the petrol, be it said,
That takes us up to Birmingham by way of Beachy Head.*

5 The Cambridge Platonists

Edited by C. A. PATRIDES 60s. net

The selected discourses of four seventeenth-century philosophers — Benjamin Whichcote, Ralph Cudworth, John Smith and Henry More — have been carefully chosen and annotated to illustrate the tenets characteristic of their common philosophy.

6 Witchcraft

Edited by BARBARA ROSEN 65s. net

This volume is concerned with manifestations of witchcraft in Elizabethan and Jacobean England. Pamphlets, reports, accounts of trials, and material describing the experience, interpretation and punishment of witchcraft, have been collected and arranged in sequence.

11 Metaphysical Poetry

18s. net paper; 45s. net boards

This volume reflects the shifts of emphasis that have taken place since the revival of interest in metaphysical poetry. These essays show an enriched apprehension of the patterns formed by the poetry of this period as a whole.

The Fool and his Sceptre

A study in Clowns and Jesters and their Audience

WILLIAM WILLEFORD 63s. net.

The originality of this book lies in its juxtaposition of a variety of approaches to folly in a way which is continually suggestive — and properly so about a subject which loses point from simplification.

Milestones on the Dover Road

By JOHN DOVER WILSON

'Because of his diverse activities it is a double story, that of his frustrated campaigns in the Civil Service, and of his later and longer professional and editorial career . . . In his pages there is lively portraiture of all who on the stage or in the Chair rescued Shakespeare from being a curriculum affliction and saw him in all his quality of a practical theatre man. There is little to be challenged in his well-argued statements of opinion.'— Ivor Brown, The Observer.

'This delightful autobiography confirms one's opinion of him, and adds to it a certain charm, the impression of a gallant spirit, full of enthusiasm and with an engaging innocence.'— A. L. Rowse, The Spectator.
