The Living Image Shakespearean Essays

T. R. HENN

Examines the nature of the imagery of field sports — hawking, hunting, shooting and fishing — and the associated imagery of warfare in Shakespeare's plays, considering it first in the light of the practices and techniques of Elizabethan field sports and weaponry and then in its broader metaphorical significance. £2.50

Grub Street Studies in a Subculture

PAT ROGERS

'Grub Street' has become a vague term denoting all types of hack writing, though for the Augustans it embodied not just an actual place but a definite life style. This study shows how the major satirists built a potent fiction round the real circumstances in which the scribblers lived, and demonstrates that this is an important and comparatively neglected aspect of their writing. THE VISION OF HELL

DR D. D. R. OWEN, University of St Andrews

This book studies the theme of the infernal descent as it was handled in medieval French literature. To the people of the Middle Ages, Hell was not a subject for pious conjecture but a place of grim reality which could be visited. Dr Owen deals in detail with the various stories of these visits and the descriptions of the topography and the torments of Hell, showing how the theme could be treated in many ways according to the needs of the writer and those for whom he wrote.

The theme of the descent into Hell exemplified the triumph of humanity over death and mankind's victory in the ultimate struggle. The greatness of the theme might have been matched by the literature which it inspired but Dr Owen shows that the medieval French writers were unable to realise its full symbolic potential and that none came near the achievement of Dante. All too often the spiritual significance of the theme was obscured by its use as an adventure story and by the accumulation of vivid and minute detail.

A study of this aspect of French medieval literature, however, is most important as an investigation into the taste and the spirit of the age and into the nature of man and certain of his beliefs.
