Dr. J. K. McDonald, Director of the Institute of Commonwealth and Comparative Studies at Queen's announces the formation of the Canadian Association for Commonwealth Literature and Language Studies, with national headquarters at the Institute.

The new Canadian Association is composed of Canadian members of the Association for Commonwealth Language and Literary Studies which is now headquartered at Makerere University, Kampala, Uganda. At the last General Meeting of that Association, held in January 1971 at the University of the West Indies, Kingston, Jamaica, members were urged to form regional societies to continue the work of the Association between its triennial conferences. The Canadian Association is the first regional group to be organized.

The Canadian Association for Commonwealth Literature and Language Studies is chaired by R. L. McDougall, Professor of English at Carleton University and Past President of the Association for Commonwealth Language and Literary Studies; the executive committee consists of Dr. J. P. Matthews, Dr. N. H. MacKenzie, both of the Department of English at Queen's, M. P. Sinclair, Douglas Library, Dr. R. E. Watters, Royal Military College, and Dr. J. K. McDonald, Director of the Institute of Commonwealth and Comparative Studies; the Secretary is Dr. R. T. Robertson, Visiting Professor in the Department of English at Queen's.

The members of the Association come from 11 universities from British Columbia to New Brunswick and plan to hold their first meeting at Queen's next summer during the meetings of the Learned Societies.
