Song for a September Birth

for Joanna

Last wheat of summer,
Sun inheritor,
This world has gleaned you
As a tiny grain,
As confirmation
Of a labour's light,
The shock of birth still Playing round your head.

Prepared stand winter
Seasons to receive
Your breath of brightness,
And a sleep will help
The earth continue
Till your dance returns
Its greening, skyward
Rhythm, year by year.

Workmate of living,
Small comrade in arms,
One battle over for you
Yet another starts,
We stare in wonder,
Bless your busy fists
And feet, your complete
Brave contingent here.
