The Sky Had Found a Voice

the sky had found a voice
the iris blue stitched a vivid music in my ear among the static hackles of the spruce (that zig-zagging frozen electricity,
the bare rock’s oldest dreams given life) now edged in colourless-blue light a bobbin shape
a plum’s weight
bobs
a warm waving line and treadles and shuttles a clean shining needle of song

John Steffler