

Notes on Contributors

WILLIAM BEDFORD is a Ph.D. candidate at Sheffield University. He has published poetry, stories and criticism in Agenda, Critical Quarterly, Delta, Tribune, Poetry Review and Essays in Criticism.

IAN BURTON has published books on music and drama and a collection of poems, Liberty of the Clink (1978). He teaches at Bath College of Higher Education and is writing a book on the relation of music and drama in the early seventeenth century.

GREG GATENBY is a widely published Toronto poet. His most recent collection of poems was issued by Black Moss Press in September 1978.

DERRY JEFFARES is an internationally known scholar and editor who is no stranger to the pages of ARIEL.

ARTHUR KISTNER teaches at the University of Colorado. MADGE KISTNER is a freelance writer. They have published collaborative articles on English Renaissance drama in numerous scholarly journals in the past nine years.

CHARLES A. KNIGHT teaches at the University of Massachusetts in Boston, where he has also served as Acting Dean. He has published articles on Fielding and other eighteenth-century writers in such journals as Criticism, MLR and PLL.

V. A. DE LUCA teaches at the University of Toronto and has published essays on various Romantic poets and prose writers. His book Thomas De Quincey: The Prose of Vision is forthcoming from University of Toronto Press.

ROBERT MCCARRON completed his M.A. at Simon Fraser University and is a Ph.D. candidate at University College London. He has previously published an article on Dickens.

GEORGE MILLER teaches at the University of Delaware. He has published articles on Milton in English Quarterly, Milton Quarterly, Language and Style, Neuphilologische Mitteilungen, and Cahiers elizabethains, and is the author or co-author of four books.