Mahmoud Ababneh is pursuing a Ph.D. in English Literature at the University of Calgary on Treaty 7 territory. His research centers around postcolonial Anglophone literatures, postcolonial theories, and decolonization.

Cates Baldridge is the Battell-Stewart Professor of English at Middlebury College, and the author of The Dialogics of Dissent in the English Novel, Graham Greene's Fictions: The Uses of Extremity, and Prisoners of Prester John, as well as journal articles on various nineteenth- and twentieth-century subjects. He has recently completed a book manuscript which considers the functioning of agriculturalist ideologies—and especially their depictions of hunter-gatherers—in works of literature from Shakespeare to Coetzee.

Gabriel Bámgbóṣé is an Assistant Professor of African and Comparative Literature at the University of California, San Diego. He is a poet, literary critic, and translator. His interests in scholarship include Black poetics, African women's literature, feminist, postcolonial, and decolonial thoughts. Bámgbóṣé's work has appeared in African Literature Today, CLCWeb: Comparative Literature and Culture, Contemporary Humanities, and Ideas & Futures, among other venues.

Jeremy De Chavez, Ph.D. is an Assistant Professor of Literature in English at the University of Macau, Macau SAR, China. While his research and teaching areas are primarily in Postcolonial Studies, Global Anglophone Literature, and Critical/Cultural Theory, he is committed to being a strategic generalist with wide-ranging interests across literary periods, genres, and cultural forms. His work appears or is forthcoming in Critical Arts: South-North Cultural and Media Studies, Sophia: International Journal of Philosophy and Traditions, Kritika Kultura, Text Matters: A Journal of Literature, Theory, and Culture, ANQ, and Critical Asia Archives, among others.

Travis Franks is an Assistant Professor of Native American and Indigenous Literatures in the Department of English at Utah State University. He is currently working on a book manuscript titled Settler Nativism: Indigeneity and Diaspora in Narratives of Belonging, which compares contemporary literatures of the U.S. and Australia. His previous work appears in MELUS, Western American Literature, and elsewhere.

Maryam Gowralli is a Master's student studying English Literature and Creative Writing at the University of Calgary. Her research includes the study of BIPOC literatures, and how they relate to globalization, ecocriticism, decolonial theory, and critical race theory. Her poetry collection, Citizenship in Water, which traces transatlantic and transpacific histories, is forthcoming with That Painted Horse Press.

Alden Sajor Marte-Wood is an Assistant Professor of English at Rice University. He works on literature and media from Asia and its global diaspora. His scholarly writing has appeared in Meridians, Verge: Studies in Global Asias, Post45, Post Script, and The Routledge Companion to Literature and Economics.

Dalia Bolotnikov Mazur received her Ph.D. in English, with an interdisciplinary emphasis in translation studies, from the University of California, Santa Barbara, where she specialized in global Anglophone literary studies. Her work appears or is forthcoming in the Journal of Modern Literature and Linear and Multilinear Algebra.

Vincent Pacheco is a Ph.D. student in South and Southeast Asian Studies at the University of California, Berkeley. He was recently a faculty member in the Department of Literature at De La Salle University, Manila. His main areas of academic interest center on Southeast Asian cinema and literature, post-Marxist theory, and nineteenth-century gothic literature. His essays have been published in journals such as ANQ, Masculinities and Social Change, and Text Matters. He also has essays forthcoming in Kritika Kultura and JMMLA.

Vaibhav Iype Parel teaches English and other literatures at Hansraj College, University of Delhi, India. He is interested in South Asian Anglophone crime fiction, postcolonial writing in English, and diasporic fiction.
